House Seeks Cuts Of $60 Billion Over 3 Years

By Jonathan Fuerbringer New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives has approved a package of spending cuts that would reduce the federal budget deficit by about $60 billion over three years.

The package, approved Thursday by a vote of 228 to 199, includes major cuts in rural and public housing, reductions in veterans' programs, cuts in student loans and one-year freeze in pay for civilian The Control of the Co

The Senate bogged down Thursday on its own deficit-reducing package because of a dispute over attaching a measure to curb textile imports. The Reagan administration has threatened to veto both the House and Senate proposals.

[In fiscal 1985, the federal government ran a deficit of $211.9 billion, which, though a record, was less than had been expected, according to Treasury Department figures released Friday and reported by The Associated Press. The previous record of $207.8 billion was set for fiscal 1983. In fiscal 1984, the deficit was $185.3 billion.

Ŏf Reagan Veto By Steven V. Roberts WASHINGTON - The Senate has ignored threats of a presidential veto and warnings of economic disaster and strongly signaled its approval of a severe limit on textile and footwear imports.

The measure survived a key test vote Thursday, 54-42. But Senate leaders then set it aside before a final vote could be taken.

To head off a filibuster by the trade bill's opponents, the sponsors are trying to attach it as an amendment to a catch-all bill that carries out deficit reduction measures mandated by the congressional budget resolution for 1986. That kind of measure, known as a reconciliation bill, comes to the floor under special rules that limit debate and prohibit a filibuster.

The vote was the first step in a two-stage parliamentary voting process necessary to attach the The packages approved in the bill. It indicated that the Senate House and being worked on in the Senate are designed to achieve a major portion of the deficit reductions. But Senate leaders are vote again. The sponsors of the trade bill believe that attaching it to the bud-get legislation would help shield it from a veto. But Senator Robert J. Dole a Republican of Kansas and the majority leader, warned the Senate that President Ronald Reagan was prepared to veto the entire reconciliation bill if it contained the import curbs.

Senator Ernest F. Hollings, Democrat of South Carolina, scoffed at the veto threat and said Mr. Reagan would eventually bow to political pressure.

Moscow Attacks Reagan UN Speech, Says It Ignores Arms Control Issue

MOSCOW -The Soviet Union said Friday that a call by President Ronald Reagan for "a fresh start" in U.S.-Soviet relations amounted to a rehash of Washington's "bankrupt foreign policy directives."

Shultz Plans Moscow Sessions Before Summit

By Bernard Gwerrzman New York Times Some

UNITED NATIONS, New York - Secretary of State George P. Shultz announced Friday that he would confer in Moscow with Soviet leaders Nov. 4 and 5 to intensify preparations for the meeting be-tween President Ronald Reagan and Mikhail S. Gorbachev next month in Geneva.

The session in Moscow, which would mark the first time an American secretary of state has traveled to the Soviet capital since 1978, would in effect decide the scope of the agreements that might emerge from the Reagan meeting with the Soviet leader in Geneva on Nov. 19 and 20, administration officials

Mr. Shultz, emerging from a two-hour meeting with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze of the Soviet Union, said he would meet in Moscow not only with Mr. Shevardnadze, but with Mr. Gorbachev as well.

Among the ideas under active discussion for possible agreement at Geneva is a statement of principles to govern the arms control negotiations. In 19th Game, Kasparov Shows Scorn for Karpov By Celestine Bohlen

Vashington Post Service

MOSCOW - It all came out in the open Thursday night — the tension, the emotion, the festering rivalry between two great chess players, now locked in their second battle for the world title.

Until then, the champion, Anatoli Karpov and the challenger. Gary Kasparov, had stuck to a script of cool, perhaps frosty, correctness. At least three nights a week for the past two months, the giant Tchaikovsky Hall and silently played out their antagonism on a board with 16 pieces each.

State of Siege Declared in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES - President Raúl Alfonsin of Argentina declared a state of siege Friday for a period of 60 days to curb violence linked to next month's congressional elections, Interior Minister Antonio Tróccoli announced.

Mr. Tróccoli said in a radio broadcast that the measure would not affect the Nov. 3 elections but was necessary to detain without trial those the government suspected of responsibility for a wave of bombings.
The measure suspends many individual rights and gives security forces wide powers to arrest and imprison people without trial.

The announcement came after a judge ruled that the government's use of emergency powers this week to order the arrest of 12 people was unconstitutional because no state of siege had been declared.

Mr. Tróccoli said a new decree had now been issued ordering the arrest of the 12 - six military officers and six civilians. A state of siege was last in force in Argentina between 1974 and 1983. It was lifted for the presidential elections that brought Mr. Alfonsin to power, ending almost eight years of military rule. Mr. Troccoli said a separate decree had been issued, besides that

The draft mentioned the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, the rejection of acquisition of territory by force and an end to the occupation of the occunied territories, according to Westem diplomats.

The United States submitted a more general paragraph calling simply for a "comprehensive and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem in all its aspects." It has consistently opposed references to a "just" settlement.

The United States has also opposed calls for an end to the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, as well as a resolution of the Middle East problem under UN auspices on the ground that this would involve the Soviet Union and would be time-consuming.

Spain, U.S. to Continue Talks on Bases

MADRID (AP) — Spain and the United States have agreed to commune talks on the future of U.S. military personnel stationed in Spain following initial discussions this week. A joint statement issued Philay indicated that both sides would study the contribution of the other to

"Enropean and Western security."

Spain had been lobbying for the talks, which began Wednesday, since before President Ronald Reagan's visit to Madrid last May.

The statement made no direct reference to the reduction of the 1256 U.S. troops and 1,669 civilian personnel stationed at four joint-se military bases and six communications centers in Spain. But both Spanish and U.S. sources have indicated privately that discussion of troop reduction, requested by the Spaniards, is the central theme of the talks. A second round of discussions is scheduled for December.

U.S. Education: More, If Perhaps Not Better

The American people are the most educated in the world," a recent U.S. Census Burean study said, but added that the quality of American schools has sagged.

It cited surveys showing that in 1980-81 almost 32 percent of Americans 25 or older had at least some college education; compared, for example, with 17.3 percent of East Germans. 17.2 percent of Canadians, 15.5 percent of Swedes and 14.5 per-cent of Japanese.

But the study went on to cite such evidence as Scholastic Aptitude Test scores, which steadily declined from 1963 before picking up slightly this year, to support its conclusion that "the quality of schooling has de-clined, especially during the 1970s."

NASA Says a Journalist Will Fly Aboard Shuttle, Perhaps Next Fall By Philip M. Boffey

WASHINGTON - The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has announced that a journalist will be chosen to fly aboard the space shuttle, probably on a flight next fall.

A teacher has already been chosen as the first citizen passenger to fly into space. She is Sharon Christa McAuliffe, a high school teacher from Concord, New Hampshire. She and a backup teacher are training at the Johnson Space Center in Houston for a flight in lannary.

The goal of the program is to send men and women into space who nunicate their experience more effectively than the astronants, who are often terse in describing space and space flight.

Some journalists and educators said they were uneasy about the plan to send a journalist into space, and called the move essentially a public relations program for the space agency. Such statements were discounted by the Association of Schools of Journalism and Mass Education, which is coordinating the nationwide selection process.

Roy M. Fisher, former editor in chief of the Chicago Daily News, which teased publication in 1978, and former dean of the journalism school at the University of Missouri, called the choice of a journalist good to the degree that it acknowledges the importance of journalism to public understanding."

But Mr. Fisher said "it makes me uneasy" whenever "a journalist is used as a tool to promote any special interest, even one as worthy as innate goodness of Americans and the sanctity of freedom. He called on the Soviet Union to join with the United States in resolving regional conflicts — but only in those regions where Moscow stands to lose. Mr. Reagan seemed less interested in diplomacy than in scoring debating points off Mikhail Gorbachev.

Thus the president had little to say to the United Nations on its 40th anniversary about disarmament. He discerned "seeds which we should nurture" in the Soviet proposal for deep cuts in strategic arsenals. But he followed with an unabashed sales pitch for his Strategic Defense Initiative, and bolstered it with an 18year-old Soviet testimonial for defensive systems long rejected by U.S. presidents.

Mr. Reagan's approach surely was meant as a response to successful Soviet propaganda initiatives, and it has undoubted appeal to some domestic audiences. The pity is that he threw away a precious chance to bid for the high ground with his global audience. Detecting threats to peace, freedom and sovereignty only in the other fellow's corner did little to enhance his credibility,

"Freedom is not the sole prerogative of the chosen few," declared Mr. Reagan, "but the

To a world eager for progress toward peace at Geneva, President Reagan has offered a combative sermon. He spoke Thursday of the Not once in his address did the president find some of God's children live in South Africa. Not once in his address did the president find occasion to mention apartheid. Neither did he voice the concern that even his own administration feels about the lack of political liberty in Chile, South Korea and the Philippines.

He castigated the Soviet Union for its intervention in Afghanistan, its support of Viet-nam's invasion of Cambodia and its military assistance to leftist regimes in Ethiopia, Ango-la and Nicaragua. To rub it in, he added to his advance text explicit and belligerent comments on Marxist-Leninist governments and figures for Soviet-bloc troops in five countries.

By contrast, he described the American-aided "contra" rebels in Nicaragua as "strug-gling democratic resistance forces." The dis-tinction will be lost on many people, particularly most Latin Americans.

Mr. Reagan asks Moscow to assume joint responsibility for peacemaking in regional conflicts. In theory, that is a fine idea, worthy of consideration at the summit conference. There is no reason for the Geneva meetings to be restricted to issues of strategic arms control. But neither peacemaking nor peace can be so selective. A sermon vulnerable to such easy challenge can persuade only the converted. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Consuming Interests

Tax Reform: Last Chance?

American producers may no longer set the standard for the world, but when it comes to consuming, the United States still has no equal. Led by the biggest consumer of them all, the federal government, buyers managed to wake the economy up a bit in the third quarter of the year after six months of languor. Now. however, forecasters are worrying that the consuming public may not be up to the job of keeping the economy moving.

The trouble, of course, is that the public, like the government, has been buying on time. Last month, as consumers splurged on new autos, personal savings hit a historic low. That one month would not be so disturbing had it not followed a near-record low for savings in August, and a declining trend over many months before. The government, meanwhile, has been boosting measured gross national product by spending more on surplus farm commodities and defense - again with borrowed money. The Reagan administration naturally prefers to highlight the positive side of this profligacy - the modest rise in personal income and measured output. But even the government's economists admit that private consumers, at least, cannot be counted on to keep buying at the current pace. With savings already near worry — the slim pay raises that most workers can expect in the coming year. Only a few years ago, with inflation in high gear, wage restraint was considered a good sign for the economy. Now, however, with inflation-adjusted wages already as low or lower than they were in the early 1970s - and with the economy dependent on high con-sumption for its fuel — small pay hikes may lead to a stalled economy.

One way out of the bind might be to raise wages. But companies cannot afford to do that when profits are poor and productivity gains abysmal. Foreign competition, made worse by the overvalued dollar, is part of the trouble. And the big budget deficit has a role to play in that too. But another big factor is that bus investment, apart from relatively short-lived items such as computers and business autos, has also been lackluster: Last quarter it fell. But how did the consumer come to play so

Behind Peres's Offer, A Note of Desperation

By William Pfaff

Pares's proposal for new UN-sponsored negotiations between Isra-d and Jordan is a shrewd, but also, one thinks, desperate attempt to capitalize on the collapse of the Palestine Liberation Organization as a political force. He recognizes that this is the moment every Israeli government has awaited — when there is no one left, on the Palestinian side, to pose serionsly the Palestine question.

It is a desperate moment because if nothing comes of this initiative—and very likely nothing will—Israel almost certainly is going to annex the West Bank, in fact or in effect. If it does that, Israel's democracy will be brought into-question.

The PLO is discredited, its Arab

UN: Its War-Weary Founders Were Hardly Utopians

P ARIS — There are no grounds for argument against the wide-spread judgment that the United Nations falls short of what it should be, but it is a lot better than nothing. It has aged 40 years. It has not matured.

There are good grounds for reject-ing the misty-eyed claim that its founders were utopians whose vision was betrayed, that it was born in rosy innocence and despoiled by a dirty world. Such nostalgia falsifies the record of how the organization was established and diverts responsations.

The people who gathered in San Francisco to write the UN Charter in 1945 had no illusions about war and peace. There was excitement and peace. There was excitement and world War II was ending and the aggressors were being cisco as a young diplomat, deferring vanquished. But there was clear understanding that it would not be easy law Molotov, and his deputy, the vituto keep the peace, that there were still grave tensions and that the temptation to use force would persist.

The delegates were keenly aware of the failure of the League of Nations established after World War L Their guiding thought was to correct its worst, overidealistic mistakes. They all understood that the UN would only really work if the major powers under another Yalta agreement. They were in agreement, and that while it were freed, but were rearrested a few might prevent or stop small wars, it years later when the Communists seemed bewildered by the proceed-could not override disputes between the big powers.

Even before the charter conference started, it was almost derailed by a Soviet-American quarrel. Stalin demanded three seats, in the guise of separate memberships for the Uk-raine and Belorussia alongside the Soviet Union. President Roosevelt had died shortly before without tell-ing Vice President Truman he had lay Molotov, and his deputy, the vitu-perative Andrei Vyshinsky, whose chief experience in diplomacy had been as prosecutor in the Moscow purge trials. Stalin made no pretense that the Soviet Union would be a helpful partner. The conference nearly broke down halfway through because he arrested 16 Poles sent to negotiate in Moscow consolidated their power in Warsaw. In that atmosphere, the people whose leadership and vision stood out were from smaller countries, men such as Herbert Evatt of Australia Jan Masaryk of Czechoslovakia, Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium, Eze-quiel Padilla of Mexico.

For a time, there was an effort to establish a standing UN force that might at least be able to put out brushfires. It never came into being, which was probably as well because it might have provoked more troubles than it could have solved.

True, no one then imagined the proliferation of states that has bloated the UN now. They were encouraged into existence by the charter's one-state, one-vote rule. Thirty-two of the organization's members have fewer than a million people, and the total contribution of more than half its members amounts to only 2 percent of the UN budget.

Most of the founding delegates were from Europe and Latin America. One of the few others was Prince Faisal, who later became king of Saudi Arabia. He was the carried exotic of the conference, a great favorite of San Francisco hostesses, and he ings. There was no Third World, but there was a deep sense of the respon-sibility of the old nations. Since then, there has been no war

Europe and no nuclear weapons have been used. But there have been about 150 wars in other parts of the world, and every one of the five atomic powers has been involved inighting somewhere.

It would not have occurred to the war-weary founders to say what Imelda Marcos of the Philippines told the General Assembly. The problems confronting the world, she said, "have their roots in injustice, intolerance, greed and dominance by the strong." She should know.

They understood the conflict of national interests and ambitions. They did not aspire to remake man-kind, or even politics; just to find peaceful ways to sort our disputes.

As Undersecretary-General Brian Urquhart said in a tribute to the late

Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, "The noble words of the Charter about the primacy of the task of maintaining international peace and security were not idle rhetoric, but the fruit of bitter experience."

The UN has not regressed at 40, it just has not summoned the will to end its difficult beginnings.

Some Practical Lessons in 'Diplomatic Deception'

WASHINGTON — In social life, it is called Wetiquette. In personal life, it is called hypocrisy. In political life, it is called diplomacy. Americans tactlessly persist in calling it by its generic name: lying. Americans have a tolerance for many things. Lying is not one of them.

Take last week. From all the handwringing, one could be forgiven for thinking that the worst transgression in the Achille Lauro affair was not that terrorists shot an old man, or that Italy let the alleged ringleader go, but that for eight hours President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt lied about the whereabouts of the terrorists. For this misdemeanor, the Egyptian ambassador was subjected to a cross-examination on a late-night talk show of the sort not seen since some hapless witness decided to perjure himself before the lawyer Edward Bennett Williams,

Caught in a lie, the ambassador tried to slip away. Alas, he could run but he could not hide Mr. Mubarak, on the other hand, took the first opportunity to admit to "a diplomatic decep-tion." Rather than regret, he evinced surprise that anyone should have taken much notice, let alone offense. After all, he has more important things to worry about than passing the Watergate truth test: Such as the stability of his regime, on which hangs the security of 46 million people. Caught between Islamic fundamentalists and angry American allies, he decided that the better part of valor was an eight-hour lie. Big deal.

But for Americans, famous for their frankness, and not yet jaundiced by centuries of statecraft, it is a big deal. It was said in 1604 that an amhassador is an honest man sent abroad to lie for the commonwealth. Yet Americans have yet to get used to the idea. They have the contrary view that in diplomacy, truth-telling is always a virtue. It is a charming and expensive indulgence that only a young country can believe and only a big country can afford.

By Charles Krauthammer

Not that the United States has not told some whoppers. There was President Eisenhower's lie about the U-2 spy plane. Thinking the pilot was dead, the State Department put out the story that the U-2 was an off-course weather plane. And there was Adlai Stevenson's lie about the Bay of Pigs. Lied to by the Central Intelligence Agency, he told the Security Council that the United States had nothing to do with the invasion. After

The idea that truth is al virtue is a charming indulgence only a big country can afford.

Victnam and the Watergate affair, American revulsion with political lying peaked: In 1976, a president was elected on a platform of truthtelling and little else.

But lying can be so indispensable that not even Jimmy Carter could do without. In advance of the Iran rescue mission, Jody Powell planned a cover story (about a possible blockade) and, when Jack Nelson of the Los Angeles Times got wind of a mission, Mr. Powell used it. He categorically denied any plans for a rescue mission. Even then there were some who carped that Mr. Powell should have issued a "no comment" rather than a denial, so as not to allow a true lie to pass his lips. Of course, a "no comment" would have aroused suspicions and jeopardized lives.

But for some reporters, jeopardizing credibility is the greater sin. They urged Mr. Powell to resign. Now the good news. Americans may be learn-ing to relax. I detect a note of maturity issuing, as usual, from George Shultz, the State Department philosopher. Earlier this year, he was asked about alleged CIA involvement in a bombing in Beirut. "If the CIA denies something, it's donied," he replied. Note: not "false," but "denied." Lovely. "Denied" is a category all its own, hovering somewhere between truth and falsity, and, for countries prepared to act in the world, indispensable. Whether or not Mr. Shultz was being intentionally any, he had delinered a leavest being intentionally wry, he had delivered a lesson in Old World statecraft.

The notion of deniability, like Old World statecraft, is foreign to American sensibilities. Nevertheless, demability is valuable to U.S. diplomacy. Why, for example, is so much U.S. aid minist grenillas "covert"? The term seems both Indicrous (can't everyone read about it in The Washington Post?) and sinister (is the government hiding something?).

In fact, the major purpose of "secret" aid to, say, Afghan guerrillas is not to hide the facts from Americans (or Russians, for that matter: they read the Post, too), but to provide protective cover to U.S. allies. Pakistan funnels U.S. aid to the Afghan insurgents, but is too vulnerable to Soviet pressure to declare so openly. Moscow knows what is going on, of course, but for Paki-stan to announce it publicly would be nothing more than a provocation. Why add insult to insurgency? So all parties agree to a fiction.

Fiction is considered a high form of literature
but, in the United States at least, a low form of diplomacy. Diplomacy being a way to advance the interests of one's country by means short of war, it is hard to see why this should be.

I concede that truth is preferable. For one thing it is easier to memorize. On the other hand. it can be habit forming. What to do? Graham Greene had it right. "He always preferred the truth," he says of his hero in "The Human Factor." "Except on really important occasions."

Syria is eliminating every competitive Arab force in its area; it cooperated in putting the PLO out of business. It is slowly, but ruthlessly.

annexing Lebanon.
Mr. Peres's Labor Party has always favored trading territory on the occu-pied West Bank for security. Labor would favor some kind of Palestinian political emity there, associated with Jordan. The notion of a largely pow-erless Palestinian state is attractive because the West Bank and its population would then be considered a separate nation while Israel, in com-bination with Jordan, could continue to be the ultimate supervisor of security in the area.

For Israel, it is an attractive solution. But now it is almost certainly an impossible one. Why should Jordan cooperate? Why should Palestinians content themselves with abridged sovereignty in a client state? One may say that it is more than they have now; but this is a struggle in which realism long ago foundered in a tide of decame and realism long.

of dreams and passions.
Mr. Peres bids, as well, against the rising political force in his own country. The Likud Party members of his own government oppose him. The conservative and religious parties, which consider the West Bank part of Biblical Israel and inalienable, are the ones likely, in the end, to have their way. If they do, it means that Israel permanently incorporates a large and resentful Arab population. It inevitably will deprive that popula-tion of political rights.

Demographic evolution will see to that, in a Greater Israel, the Arab population, which has the higher birthrate, would in the foreseeable future outnumber the Jewish popula-tion, and Israel then would cease to be a Jewish state. As that is imadmissible to Israelia, there is no acceptable alternative to depriving the Arab population of a full political role,

To do that would cause a momentous change in the nature of the Israe-li state itself, and the implications of this have been much debated.

What alternative exists? One either expels the Arabs, which is what the extrement factions represented by Rabbi Meir Kahane and the Kach party want, or one installs a system that keeps the Arabs permanently out of power. Successive generations of young Arabs, in those circumstances, may be expected to men ever more desperately to violence, and the need for repression will grow.

And where is the United States in this? Usual the Achille Luoro affair, it was keeping on, increasingly meffecmally, with what was meant to be aneven-handed policy of friendship for "moderate? Arabs and for Israel, urging concessions that neither side ake, i hi the presidencies of Jimmy Carter, Gerald Ford and Richard Nixon:

Under the Reagan administration, the commitment to Israel had become so unmanced that the policy had lost credibility; and now it has effectively collapsed. The surviving American role in the Middle East is as Israel's ally (Israel's master, wholly responsible for whatever Israel does, in the fevered rhetoric that dominates the Arab world). Its influence among the conservative Arab elites of Saudi Arabia, the Gulf, Egypt, and the Maghreb, is weakened.

A major shift in the international relations of the Middle East has begun, from which the Soviet Union linost inevitably will profit.

More important is the choice for israel's own future that Mr. Peres implicitly has posed. It is a decision from which there may be no turning back. It can, moreover, set Israel on a course that the United States will, in the end, refuse to follow.

Moreover, since it is based on estimated foreign perceptions of other American behavior, it is a wholly subjective argument that is almost impossible to prove or disprove.
What are America's real interests in Angola? As Mr. Kissinger recognized in 1975, the country has almost no independent strategic significance for the United States. True, Mr. Kissinger did argue that the American failure to respond to the Soviet-Cuban challenge would set off a domi-no-like effect. But no dominoes have fallen to the Russians in southern Africa in the decade since Congress prevented intervention in Angola

The continuing war there is one part of the much larger conflict over the future of southern Africa. That conflict is not primarily between East and West but between South Africa and black sub-Saharan Africa. If it ultimately affects the East-West bal-ance adversely — which is far from certain — it will be because American policies leave the United States on the South African side at the end of the conflict. Intervention in support of Jonas Savimbi could conti importantly to just such a result.

Intervention would be self-defeating. It has been the primary U.S. goal in Angola to obtain the removal of Cuban troops and Soviet advisers. Those troops and advisers were invited in the mid-1970s, as the Angolan leadership sought to defend itself against intervention by South Africa,

Zaire, China and the United States, and they remain primarily to deal with continuing attacks by South Af-rica and by Mr. Savimbi's guerrillas. To intervene on his side now would only further reduce the prospects for Soviet and Caban withdrawal. Moreover, if the United States makes the Angolan conflict a test of American resolve, it is almost certain to weaken rather than enhance its credibility. The Russians and Cubans have regularly demonstrated their willingness to respond to others' interventions by upping the ante—and Congress is most unlikely to go along with a continuous escalation of U.S. involvement in Angola, notwithstanding its foolish decision in July to end the prohibition on intervention. end the prohibition on intervention. It is a central purpose of all Third World regimes to maximize their antonomy and independence. When even Marxist regimes are no longer dependent on the Soviet Union for protection against internal and external enemies, they typically seek to balance their international relationships by an opening to the West. The regime in Angola has demonstrated such tendencies, but is incapable of moving further because of its continuing dependence on the Russians moving further because of its con-tinuing dependence on the Russians and Cubans and because the United States has been unwilling to change its policies as long as the Russians and Cubans stay. The route to more favorable Angolan policies therefore lies not in increasing external pres-sures but in reducing them.

Helping the Philippines

The report "U.S. Plans improvements for Bases in Philippines" (Oct.

11) quotes the U.S. navy secretary, John P. Lehmann Jr., as saying: "It would be a horrendous situation were the Soviets able to operate out of the Philippines."

The Marcos government is one of those that the former UN ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick classified as authoritarian rather than totalitarian meaning the United States could safely associate with it.

But the nature of President Ferdinand Marcos's "authoritarianism" guarantees that he and his government will come to an ignoble end, and that the people's anger at Mr. Marcos and his benefactors will blind them, and any post-Marcos govern-ment, to the disadvantages of association with the Soviet Union. ELIZABETH YOUNG.

Regarding the editorial "A U.S. Dilemma in Manile" (Oct. 17), the Reagan administration is not trying to destabilize the Marcos regime; it is trying to save the Philippines from a ommunist takeover.

An American's View of Rural Japan

By Christine Chapman T OKYO — Brian Williams's watercolors show scenes of rural Japan that few foreigners know and many Japanese have forgotten. Williams, an American painter whose latest collection showed at the Kato Gallery this month, believes that Japanese rural life is disappearing fast. "I want to cap-the disappearing fast. I want to cap-ture it in a poetic sense," he said, "before it disappears."

Since 1972, when he arrived in Japan and settled in Kyoto, Wil-liams, 35, has been paining the countryside in fine detail, with soft, stark colors that evoke an atmosphere of isolation. His work varies in scope from panoramic landscapes to delicate miniatures, and from "traditional conservative images," as he calls the thatched-roof farmhouses and views of Lake Biwa, to a more modern concentration on single artifacts, a wooden rice bucket or a persimmon jug. The paintings convey abandonment, disuse, a sense of loneliness. Williams is much admired in Japan. "He is one of the best," said Hiroshi Ogawa, manager of the Kato Gallery. "And only a few Jap-anese artists paint in watercolor."

Watercolor painting is a Western art alien to Japanese technique and temperament, and not much practiced professionally. Sunday painters along the palace most dab with brush and paints, but professional artists such as the great and venerable landscape master, 76-year-old Kai Higashiyama, prefer oils.

Like other foreign artists who come to Japan to learn the techniques of Japanese art, Williams studied sumi-e and woodblock and the martial art aikido. He found himself returning to his early interests in watercolor painting and etching. He said he was "too impatient" for woodblocks: "It takes so much time to concentrate on one image. Drouot Draws on France's Mine of Art tional auction houses. France's wealth of art resources is beginning to give Drouot an irresistible attraction.

"The Price of Art," just published by the French art monthly Connaissance des Arts, deals with market trends in Paris, London and

SOUREN MELIKIAN

New York during the iast season. It highlights the unrecorded or long-los; works of art of major importance that have turned up in the Paris auction house.

Last season, discoveries occurred in almost every field. One of the four or five most important portraits of the 18th-century portrait painter Elizabeth Vigée-Lebrun, appeared in November in a sale organized by the Audap-Godeau-Solanet group. It represents a young woman, the Duchesse de Gramont-Caderousse, dressed as a peasant woman of the Dauphine province. The picture, done in 1784, is beautifully painted. It established a record for Vigee-Lebrum at 7,630,000 frames.

Significantly, it was not acquired by an "American collector," as Connaissance des Arts maintains, but by Guy Stair Sainty, a New York-based English dealer in French masters of the 17th and 18th century. The picture is likely to be sold to a museum for a substantially bigger price. The portrait had not been seen since World War I.

In the same sale, one of Gustave Courbet's most accomplished Swiss landscapes could be had for 2,654,000 francs. It shows the Château de Chillon, an austere medieval structure standing on Lake Geneva. The Courbet was previous-

Occasionally the surprise generated by such discoveries sends the works shooting to extraordinary heights. Last June, the Ader-Picard-Ta-jan group sold a preparatory sketch in oils for the portrait of the Comtesse d'Haussonville by lugres for 3,523,940 francs. Despite its bland appearance, it set a world record for the artist. Every now and then, finds are made even in the most intensively researched fields — the avant-garde schools of the late 19th and early 20th century, from Impressionism to Fauvism.

In March, the masterpiece of Charles An-

PARIS — As the dearth of works of art available for sale becomes the one of the quoise and blueish greens, with touches of ormost pressing problems confronting interna- ange, is as attractive as it is unusual. It had never been reproduced. The picture was snatched up for 2,211,000 francs by an American collector living in London.

> Last season's biggest sensations, however. concern objets d'art.

The most important bronze by the Dutch master Adriaen de Vries seen at auction for ears, came up in December, in a sale organized by the Couturier-Nicolay group. A rearing horse stands on a pedestal with the artist's name fully inscribed in block letters, a rare feature. The object was being sold by a French aristocratic family in the Dauphine, one of whose ancestors had been ambassador to The Hague in the 17th century. It is believed to have been executed around 1620. Its mention in an inventory in 1715 makes it probable that it was bought by the ambassador in Holland, where he died in 1669. virtually guaranteeing its authenticity — a rare assurance concerning a Baroque bronze.

Except for a brief exhibition in the Dauphine a few years ago that had gone unnoticed, no one knew about its existence. The price, just over 10 million francs, easily established the horse as the most expensive bronze in the world.

In June, highly important pieces came up in clusters at Drouot, Seven Egyptian carvings were auctioned by Jean Claude Binoche in typi-cal Drouot style, i.e. in a sale with a bit of everything in it. But the expert Jean-Loup Des-prat had done a good mailing job. A beautiful but small and rather late statue of a scribe, only 2 inches (32 centimeters) high, was sold for a huge 1,324,635 francs. An exceedingly rare bronze statue of a lion-headed deity seated on its low-backed throne was, on the other hand, quite reasonable at 1,087,589 francs. Neither carving had been illustrated before or mentioned in a publication.

Most astonishing is the case of a collection of pre-Columbian art formed by a former French nbassador to Mexico between 1925 and 1929, The seller is not identified in the catalog nor in the Connaissance des Arts book, in keeping with the French passion for secrecy. Indeed, Eugene Pepin, as he is called, had gone further still. Although a lifetong friend of Henri Lehmann. the noted authority on Mexican art, Pepin, now 98, had never mentioned his collection to him. It included several pieces of a kind that had never been offered at auction before, such as the grand, who started off as a Neo-Impressionist standing figure of a man in dark greenish stone and became a founding father of the Nabi from Teotihuacan, datable to around 500 B. C. and became a founding father of the Nabi from Teorihuacan, datable to around 500 B. C. movement in the 1890s, turned up in a sale conducted by Guy Loudmer. "The Western Line," as the landscape is called, was done in 1886. Its brushwork in short strokes whirling in every direction is reminiscent of van Gogh, and

On the same day at Drouot, Jacques Tajan was selling a mid-15th-century psalter from Bruges with seven full-page miniatures, 12 other miniatures of an irregular format, and 10 illuminated initials. No one had heard about the manuscript until the sale. It is one of the more significant discoveries concerning the history of Flemish painting in the Gothic period, as the scholarly study by the expert Claude Guérin demonstrates. It established a world record for any Flemish manuscript, at 5,503,000 francs.

This season an impressive number of works of art in the top-level museum category are already lined up. A portrait of a young man holding a pipe by Georges de la Tour (1593-1652) to be sold on Dec. 3, has a 10-million-franc estimate.

Equally remarkable is the appearance on the Paris market of a collection of early illustrated books, manuscripts and engravings. Formed over 50 years ago, it includes German books illustrated in the years that followed the invention of printing by Gutenberg, woodcuts and etchings by Dürer and Callot, and the best complete set of Goya's "Caprichos" that has seen on the market in the last decade - the 80 etchings are impeccably preserved impressions of the first edition, mounted untrimmed in their 19th-century binding. The rarest lot is a 16th-century manuscript of the Gospels with outstanding miniatures, executed around 1515 in northern France. Its two volumes have silver bindings with scenes in bas relief that are unique - marks struck by an unidentified goldsmith date the bindings to the second quarter of the 16th century. Uncharacteristically for France, the fine catalog came out weeks before the sale, which is to held by Eric Buffetaud at Drouot on Nov. 20. If French auctioneers play their cards well and improve their marketing methods, they are now in a position to make a serious comeback on the

Hattieiu Says ... Must Seek New Revenues Hatfield Says White House

By LEONARD SILK

ASHINGTON - With U.S. fiscal policy in disarray, some legislators are willing to say that neither the some legislators are willing to say that neither the emperor nor the emperor's men have clothes. Senator Mark O. Hatfield, the Oregon Republican who is chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, has taken direct aim at President Ronald Reagan over the budget deficit. He said that the Gramm-Rudman bill for balancing the budget by 1991, which the White House supports, does not have a prayer of doing it. Mr. Hatfield told a conference of business executives Wednesday that the only president in his experience who understood national defense was stood national defense was

Dwight D. Eisenbower.
"Ike," he said, "understood that the nation's security was not a simple function of military spending but of its educational system, energy, infra-structure and the overall strength of the national econ-

"Ike understood that U.S. security was not a simple function of military spending."

Mr. Hatfield accused the administration of doing in the mili-lary area what Republicans traditionally blame the Democrats for doing in the social area — "throwing money at problems," in the false belief that "if you throw enough money, the dollars will equate with security."

Mr. Hatfield calls the Gramm-Rudman bill a characle. Of the 5970 billion that he expected the government to spend in fiscal 1986, he said exempt portions included $155 billion for servicing the national debt, about $200 billion for Social Security, $150 billion for other entitlement programs and $300 billion for the military - "and the President will not accept cuts below that military — and the President will not accept cuts below that level of military spending."

That left, Mr. Hatfield estimated, only 11 to 14 percent of the budget out of which all the cuts would have to come. "If you eliminated those programs entirely," he added, "you'd still end up with a deficit of about $150 billion."

He predicted that the Gramm-Rudman bill would come to nothing even if enacted. The congressional track record, he asserted, had done the same with previous such commitments, including one passed in the 1970s for balancing the budget by 1982. The true position on eliminating the deficit now, Mr. Hatfield said, was the total exemption by both Congress and the White House of Social Security for political reasons.

Is conclusion: "We will never get control of the deficit just on the spending side; we have to deal with both the revenue and the spending side."

Tax increases remain anathema at the White House. At the fall meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d declared that Mr. Reagan had won a "national referendum" on the tax issue by 49 states to 1, decisively overthrowing his opponent's proposal to raise taxes. The tax issue, Mr. Baker indicates, is closed.

The administration has preempted the ground on the tax debate this year by Mr. Reagan's proposal to overhaul the tax system. Mr. Hatfield said, however, that if the tax revision were not "revenue neutral," but part of a strategy for dealing with the deficit, it would make sense.

"We are losing $95 billion in revenues because of the existing tax structure," he said, "but we are not proposing to use any of that money that would be gained by tax reform to reduce the

Simplifying the tax laws, he said, should be secondary to solving the debt problem, which lies at the heart of the nation's other major problems:

• High Government foreign and domestic borrowing to finance the deficit. High interest rates.

 Overvaluation of the dollar and the nation's trade deficit. The need to rescue the farmers and manufacturing industries

Ford Net Off 17% In Period

New Car Costs. Programs Cited

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

DETROIT — Ford Motor Co. reported Friday that third-quarter net income fell 17 percent from a year earlier, to $313 million, or $1.70 a share, largely due to new car incentive programs and prodnct development costs.

The company earned $379.7 million, or $2.05 a share, in the 1984 third quarter.

Ford said revenue declined 2 percent in the latest quarter, to $11.6 billion, from $11.8 billion, while operating income dropped 57 percent in the latest quarter, to $155.2 million from $362.7 million.

Analysts estimated the automaker's incentive programs reduced pretax earnings by about $30 mil-lion and that its $3-billion program for its 1986 Taurus and Sable intermediates due out this December also bit heavily into results.

But despite the lower results, industry analysts said Ford could have its second best year ever with 1985 earnings projected at about $2.34 billion. Last year Ford earned $2.91 billion.

On the New York Stock Exchange Friday, Ford shares fell 75 cents, to close at $45.375.

Ford said nine-month net fell 18 percent from a year earlier, to $1.80 billion, or $9.67 a share, from $2.19 billion, or $11.90, a year earlier. Sales totaled $38.7 billion, down 1 percent from $38.9 billion.

Ford said its U.S. operations earned an after-tax profit of $211 million, a drop of $104 million from last year. Non-U.S. opera-tions posted net earnings of $102 million, up 57 percent from $65 million in third quarter 1984. Ford Motor Credit Co., its finance unit, also posted gains with a record $96 million in net income, up 17 percent. A two-week strike at Ford's Lorain, Ohio, plant reduced factory sales 2 percent from a year earlier.

United Biscuits Profits Under Fire

Diversification, Cookie Price War Trouble Holders

By Bob Hagerty Hernotional Herail Tribune LONDON - Sir Hector Laing chairman of United Biscuits (Holdings) PLC, called up his broker early Monday morning to ask about an Elders takeover bid for a rival British food company, Allied-Lyons PLC. The chairman took the news calmly. The audacious £1.8-billion ($2.56-billion) bid from Elders IXL Ltd. of Australia was, nonetheless, a sobering sign that even the healthier British companies are no longer sale from predators.

For almost any predator,

United Biscuits would prove a tough cookie. Sir Hector, who has headed the company for 20 years, is a much more formidable figure than his gentle voice and gold reading glasses suggest. He is an old friend of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and a director of both Exxon Corp. and the Bank of England. His company dominates British sales of cookies and crackers - or biscuits, to use the all-embracing British term — with a market share of about 46 percent. Worldwide, only Nabisco Brands Inc. makes more biscuits. But a cookie price and promotion war has chomped deeply into profits from the company's main U.S. unit, Keebler Co., leaving the parent's per-share earnings stagnant over the past

"We have an awful lot of capital tied up in jam tomorrow," W.P. Gunn, UB's deputy chairman, said this week.

Some analysis, such as Julian Lakin of Scrimgeour Vickers & Co., predict that earnings at United Biscuits will show a bealthy gain again next year. But cal and Sir Hector acknowledged in an interview that the company is under pressure to produce the jam soon.

Should a bid come, "they are vulnerable," said another leading food-share analyst, who did not wish to be identified.

"They've not given shareholders "They've not given shareholders a particularly good ride in recent years."
Sir Hector has certainly taken note of the wave of food-indusny takeovers, typified by R.J. Reynolds's $4.9-billion purchase last June of United Biscuits's big rival, Nabisco, In a speech this week, Sir Hector deplored the growing willingness of British fund managers to sell control of companies whenever the price is

"We should just stop and ask ourselves whether as shareholders we are acting in our own or our country's best long-term interest when we take every oppor-tunity of immediate reward," he

The stock market, however, is obdurately focused on more short-term matters, such as prof-its at Keebler, a Chicago-based maker of cookies and snacks that United Biscuits acquired for $50 million in 1974. Long one of United Biscuits's strongest performers, Keebler accounts for around a third of the parent's annual sales of £1.75 billion. The trouble began in 1983

The sales follow the Bank of Japan's move to engineer higher short-term rates as part of its efforts to boost the yen against the dollar.

Dealers said an order to sell about $200 million of U.S. securities in London by one of the major Japanese securities firms sent long-term bond prices down nearly a full point in early New York trading.

Yen-bond prices also dropped sharply as yields rose, causing panic selling in what dealers in Tokyo described as the worst trading day for about 40 years.

"In two days, bond prices went down four points," said A. Moriyama, senior vice president of Yamaichi Securities in New York. "This is very unusual — a collapsing market."

Mr. Moriyama explained that with the rise in yields on yen-denominated issues, the interest rate advantage offered by U.S. bonds narrowed, making them less attractive and causing prices to slump.

Bond traders said heavy losses on yen bonds forred higuidation of entire porteling of the Woshington Post

Texas Oil & Gas, U.S. Steel Hold Talks on Merger

PITTSBURGH - United States Steel Corp. said Friday that it is holding discussions with Texas Oil & Gas Corp. about a possible business combination, but no agreement has been reached.

Although the talks have been numored, investors reacted with uncertainty to the report. U.S. Steel closed at $28 a share Friday on the New York Stock Exchange, down 51 from Thursday, while Texas Oil lost 50 cents, to $18.875 a share.

Earlier this month as rumors of a takeover of one of the largest U.S. independent naturalgas producers circulated, analysts at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. estimated an acquisition of Texas Oil & Gas would require a bid of $20 to $21 a share, or about $4.5 billion.

In the fiscal year ended Aug. 31, Texas Oil & Gas profit fell 20 percent to $277 million, or $1.32 a share, from $346.2 million, or $1.65 a share, in the previous fiscal year.

U.S. Steel acquired Mara-thon Oil Co. in 1981 for $6.5 billion. Marathon, the nation's 14th largest oil company on the basis of assets, accounted for $10.2 billion of U.S. Steel's $19.1 billion in sales last year. Texas Oil & Gas is 33d largest in a ranking of oil companies by assets, and reported its first annual decline in earnings in 28 years.

• The need to spur the investment necessary for the national economy's real growth.

Standing against this line is the supply-side position that, despite everything that has occurred to raise the federal deficit since 1981 and nearly double the national debt, the fault lies not in fiscal policy but in monetary policy.

While praising the administration for achieving growth without inflation, Representative Jack F. Kemp, the upstate New York Re-publican, told the same group of executives that it was the tight money policies of the Fed under Paul A. Volcker that had arrested the economy's growth and caused the swelling deficit.

Mr. Kemp insisted that faster growth would bring down the deficit, and that pegging to gold would bring down interest rates, spurring investment and also reducing the cost of servicing the public debt. the fastest-growing sector of the budget. It would also, he said, res-

Dollar Off in Quiet U.S., European Trading

NEW YORK - The dollar closed lower Friday against most major currencies in quiet, direc-tionless trading that dealers said was dominated by the threat of continued central bank action.

The U.S. currency slipped in Enropean trading and eased again later in New York, dealers said

But the dollar fell sharply against the Japanese yen, however, responding to a sharp increase in Japanese short-term interest rates. It closed at 214.90 year in Tokyo, down from 216.00 yea on Thurs Prime Minister Yasuhiro Naka above 2.65 DM at several points. day. In later New York trading, it pushed at 214.45 yen, down from $6.55.

The dollar closed in New York at 2,6480 Deutsche marks, down from 26535 DM on Thursday. Earlier in Frankfurt, it was fixed at 2.6455; down from 2.6487 DM.

Such legislation has considerable support in Congress as a way of raising government revenue and protecting U.S. oil refiners from foreign competition.

Mr. Herrington said he did not believe Congress could be persuad-ed to repeal a law barring exports of oil from Alaska's giant North Slope oil field.

Some U.S. officials have suggested that such exports to Japan should be allowed as a means of reducing the U.S. trade deficit.

BUSINESS PROFILE / François Hérail, Baubles to Gems A 10-Year-Old Newcomer to French Jewelry

International Herald Trapane PARIS — François Hérail, 38 president of Poiray, the high-fashion French jewelry company, peered out of his shop on Rue de la Paix. "See that man looking in the window, that's a man from Cartier's across the street coming to see what he can steal from my new collection," he said laughing. Mr. Herail is the new kid on the block. Although Poiray has been around since 1975, 10 years is young in the high-fushion jewelry business where the Cartiers, the Maubussons and the Boucherons have been in business for 100 years.

Like any new kid on the block, Mr. Herail had to light to get where he is, and he has had to light to stay there. A year ago, he decided to restructure to company and ob-tained more capital through new investments from British banks.

Officials of the privately held company would not, however, provide specific performance figures. "Because I'm creative, I have a survival instinct, nothing bothers me or gets me down," he said, "Money problems don't bother me because I started with nothing, couldn't care less," He started Poiray with 200,000 French francs (about $24,750 at current exchange

But the high-fashion French jewelry business has recognized that the kid has created a clean, new style, the Poiray style, that they have now begun to incorporate in their own collections. THERE is all kinds of pride, Dickie," says a character in William Wharton's new novel. "There's real pride, like being proud of good work, like when we do a good job building a porch. Then there's false pride like when you think you're better than somebody else for no good reason; that's the sin one. Then there's the lion's pride, his family. Those definitions pretty much summarize what the book is about, and they are also about the only thing that ties its jumpy, hodgepodge narrative together.

Told from shifting points of view, "Pride" addresses issues examined in the pseudonymous Wharton's previous novels. Like "Birdy," it wants to create an idiosyncratic portrait of adolescence in Depression-era America, using animals (in this case, lions) to create a strange, dreamlike fable. Like "Dad," it wants to examine the mysteries and comforts of the family. And like "A Midnight Clear," it wants to look at the effects that war - and the peacetime pitfalls of poverty and bad luck - can have on young men raised on the promises of the American Dream. Yet while each of these themes are delineated with a homey, folk-art sort of charm.

they never come together into an organic whole, and "Pride" reads like two separate novellas.

The first novella is narrated by Dickie Kettleson. a 10-year-old boy who sounds a lot like a young Holden Caulfield - smart, observant, sensitive and disaffected. He hates school, doesn't get on well with the mean kids on his block and regards his younger sister as his best friend, as his parents struggle to make it through the Depression. His father, a union steward, has been threatened by management "goons," and is faced with a decision to quit the union and surrender his pride, or endanger his happy little family.

In flat, literal prose, Dickie's story delineates lower-middle-class life in the town of Stonehurst Hills, with plenty of naturalistic detail - we are made not only to see the streets, rowhouses strung together with laundry lines, but also to experience a world in which suits are reserved for Sunday church, in which a restaurant dinner is a rare treat. In constrast, the second novella in "Pride" is more of a reverse Horatio Alger tale, painted in the primary colors and bold strokes of an old-fashioned allegory. The story of Sture Modig, a farm boy gifted with magical talents - not unlike those possessed by the

in a matter of weeks, repair anything that breaks. He becomes a war hero and a famous race-car driver. Following a terrible accident, however, his luck turns sour: his job at a local carnival — he and his pet lion, Tuffy, have a motorcycle act called the Wall of Death — no longer brings in sufficient money; his wife begins to flaunt her infidelities, and even Tuffy seems to grow more restless.

Wharton tries to bring the story of Sture and Tuffy together with the story of Dickie Kettleston and his family through a series of events that take place, one weekend, at the Jersey shore. The narrative movement should not be as difficult to pull off as the complex stream-of-consciousness employed in "Birdy," but it nonetheless fails to engage our full sympathy — mainly, one suspects, because Wharton seems unsure what he wants to accomplish.

His attempts to stitch the two stories together with verbal embroidery often feel perfunctory and strained — the portentous comparisons between Tuffy the lion and Dickie's pet kitten amount to little more than a red herring, and the repeated references to the pride that both Dickie's father and Sture take in their work feel like forced allusions to the book's title. Worse, Wharton's homespun prose has a way of coagulating into sappy aphorisms and cliches - "any fool can break a window but very for the 1930s seems sentimental, in light of the unpretty consequences that the Depression has on his characters' lives.

Oddly enough, such weakn codily enough, such weaknesses never prevent the reader from wanting to finish "Pride"—so engaged do we become in the story of Dickie's family. As he demonstrated in "Dad," Wharton has a special gift for portraying filial relationships, and his portrait of Dickie and his father — building porches together in the late summer afternoons, fishing together on an abandoned pier, sharing whispered secrets during a walk along the beach - possesses a sweemes and felt emotion that leaves a warm, pleasant after-

2 Pitchers Tie Records, 2 Ways

The Associated Press ST. LOUIS - Todd Worrell, the Cardinals' relief pitcher, and Danny Jackson, the Royals' starting pitcher, each tied a World Series record Thursday night, Worrell for striking out batters, Jackson for striking out.

Worrell, a rookie, entered the game in the sixth inning and struck out Buddy Biancalana Jackson and Lonnie Smith, In the seventh, he struck out Willie Wilson, George Brett and Frank White, making it six straight. The streak ended there because Brian Harper pinch hit for Worrell in the bottom of the Cincinnati's Horace Eller set the mark in 1919 against the Chicago White Sox and Baltimore's Moe Drabowsky tied it in 1966 against Los Angeles.

Jackson, who came up to the Royals in 1983 but before the Series had never batted in the major leagues, swing his way into the record books by striking out his first three times at bat in the game. That gave him five consecutive strikeouts, ty-ing a mark held by five players, the most recent being St. Louis joutfielder Mike Shannon in the 1964 World Series.

Jackson was surprised when told he had tied a record, at first thinking the question referred to his pitching, not his hitting. "I set a world record with that?" he said. "Well, at least I am in the record books for

Royals Rout Cardinals, 6-1, Forcing World Series to Game 6

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Cardinals were so forbidding in their house ball park this season that nobody swept three games from them there all summer. Only two teams won two of three games in any series; the New York Mets and the Cincinnati Reds. But Thursday night, with devilishly good timing, the Kansas City Royals did it, too.

On the brink of losing the World Series in five games, the Royals rose up and beat the Cardinals, 6-1. They did it despite striking out 15 times, and did it almost without challenge, scoring four runs did it almost without challenge, scoring four runs off Bob Forsch in less than two immegs, then turning over their lead to Danny Jackson, who protected it with five-hit pitching that further cannot the already placid St. Louis bats.

As a result, the Cardinals lost most of the advantage they brought home after winning the first two games in Kansas City. It had looked like a mismatch, maybe a sweep, But the Royals, who survived the American League playoff after trailing by three sames to one, went two of three on the ing by three games to one, won two of three on the Cardinals turi and sent the Series back west along

49ers, Vikings Face an Early Finish At the NFL Season's Halfway Point

By Michael Janofsky

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The National Football League NEW YORK. — The National Pootball League season reaches its halfway point this weekend, and already the San Francisco 49ers and Minnesota Vicings are confronted with critical games.

They are matched against the league's only two addicated teams, and in each case the opponent is in a particular at home. The 49ers e same division and is playing at home. The 49ers are the Los Angeles Rams in Anaheim Stadium, and the Vikings play the Bears at Soldier Field in Chicago. If the undefeateds remain undefeated, the races in the National Conference West and Central divisions will have all but disappeared.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE SEP & San Francisco (3-4) at Los Angeles (7-0): The urgen-Super Bowl champions, who have lost two straight and large of their last four. For no apparent reason, their pliense has stagnated and their defense is less imposing than it was a year ago.

Perhaps this should not be so surprising. In 1982, the season shortened by the players' strike and the similar malaise set in and they imished out of the playoffs with a 3-6 record.

Not that the Rams are a cinch to win. They have made their way on the strength of a fine defense and SAFA M not much more. Eric Dickerson, their hallowed runonce and Dieter Brock, the former Canadian Football League quarterback, has passed for more than 200 yards only once.

The Rams also have lost their last four games with the 49ers, and the last four played in Anaheim. The Los Vegas betting line this week had the teams rated Minnesota (4-3) at Chicago (7-0): The Vikings' simation is exacerbated by the presence of two other teams in the division - Detroit and Green Bay - who have designs on a playoff spot.

When the Vikings last played the Bears, in the third week of the season, they were leading, 17-9, in the third quarter. Then the injured Jim McMahon entered the game for Chicago and quickly threw three touch-down passes as the Bears won, 33-24.

. Four victories followed, although the last, 23-7 over the Packers, was somewhat misleading as the Bears, lost four of seven fumbles. And McMahon has been anable to practice most of this week because of injuries to his buttocks and an ankle, while Keith Van-Horne, the big right tackle, has a sprained ankle. (Bears favored by 8 points.)
Atlanta (1-6) at Dallas (5-2): The Falcons, with their new quarterback, David Archer, won for the first time last week, defeating the Saints. A loss to the Eagles cut the Cowboys' lead in the NFC East to one game, which means they can ill afford to lose to weak opponents. And the Falcons have given up more points than any other NFC team except Tampa Bay. An added plus for the Cowboys is that Danny White, who missed the Philadelphia game with sore ribs, is expected back (Cowboys by 12½)

New York (4-3) at New Orleans (3-4): Last season, the Giants' charge toward the playoffs was almost derailed when they lost a "little" game to Tampa Bay. This is another such game. Still, all signs point to the Giants winning. The Saints have lost their last two. their defense has been erratic, especially on passing plays, and their rebuilt offensive line has not protecte Dave Wilson, the quarterback, well (Giants by 3½.)

AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Seattle (4-3) at New York (5-2): The Jets have never Ceaten the Seahawks and are 0-5 against them at home. But if Freeman McNeil plays, the Jets have a better chance to control the ball and keep Ken O'Brien from having to pass more than 30 times. On the other hand, if the Seahawks get ahead early, they have their own ball-control expert in Curt Warner, who last Sunday had his best game in more than a month, rushing for 136 yards in a 13-10 overtime loss to Denver. (Jets by 3.)

San Diego (3-4) at Los Angeles (5-2): The Chargers will start Dan Fouts and his two favorite receivers, Kellen Winslow and Wes Chandler, for the first time Monday night since Winslow burt his knee against the Raiders more than a year ago. But the Raiders own the Chargers, having won their last six encounters. The Raiders also have a four-game winning streak and superb defense. (Raiders by 6.)

Denver (5-2) at Kansas City (3-4): The Chiefs have lost three straight; the players are upset with the Jockson W.J.T. coach, John Mackovic, over intensified practices; Bill Kenney, the quarterback, has a bad back and a sore Forsen Las shoulder, and Todd Blackledge, his replacement, Horison threw six interceptions in a 16-0 loss to the Rams. So. even though the Chiefs and Broncos have split their last four games, this meeting seems heavily weighted toward the Broncos, whose two losses were by 4 points.

each. (Broncos by 1.)
Pittsburgh (3-4) at Cincinnati (2-5): This game has to scare the Steelers for several reasons. One is that they are unaccustomed to having a losing record this deep into the season. The other is that the Bengals have scored more points (211) than any other team in the conference. But they also have given up more (240) than any other team in the league. Which way their split personality carries them will likely determine who wins this game. The Bengals won the last, 37-24. for their first victory and the first of three straight losses for the Steelers. (Steelers by 1½)

INTERCONFERENCE

Buffalo (1-6) at Philadelphia (3-4): The Bills beat the Colts for their first victory, but the Eagles are on an emotional high. With Ron Jaworski back starting at quarterback, the Eagles have won twice and Jaworski has not thrown an interception. Worse for the Bills, who have one of the weakest offenses in the league, the Eagles have one of the best defenses. Do not be superised if the Eagles win in a shutout (Eagles by 9.)

Cheen Blay (3-4) at Indianapolis (2-5): The Packers used three quarterbacks in losing to the Bears last Monday night. But the Colts are so weak, winning only once in the last four games, that any one of the quarterbacks could lead the Packers to a victory. Houston (2-5) at St. Louis (3-4): Maybe the Oilers. who have so many good players, finally have turned s around with their 44-27 victory over Cincinnal

The Cardinals, who have won the only three times these teams have played, seem to be disintegrating. They have lost three in a row, without scoring more than 10 points in any game - and the defense has not yet held an opponent to fewer than 23 points. (Cardinals by 7.)

Miami (5-2) at Detroit (4-3): The Dolphins squeaked by the Buccaneers, winning by 41-38 on a field goal in the final seconds. But if they do not shore up their pass defense, the Dolphins could lose to anybody, even the Lions. (Dolphins by 6½.)

New England (4-3) at Tampa Bay (0-7): The Bucs stop here, at least their losing streak does. Their offense is, perhaps, the best it has been in the club's history, and the Patriots, operating with Steve Grogan, do not have the resources to score three touchdowns in one game. They have not since their victory on opening day against the Packers. (Patriots by 21/2.) Washington (3-4) at Cleveland (4-3): Bernie Kosar almost guided the Browns to a victory over the Raiders. But he did not, and Gary Damelson, who is healthy again, probably will start against the Red-skins, who last lost to the Giants, 17-3. Poor Redskins. Their offense has gone pifft. The Browns' defense is every bit as good as the Giants', maybe better because

Spurs Trade Gervin to Bulls

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) - George Gervin, who has been one of the top scorers in the NBA since 1974, was traded Thursday by the San Antonio Spurs to the Chicago Bulls for forward David Greenwood. Gervin, 33, led the league in scoring four seasons and seven times was on the all-star team. His agent said the Bulls had agreed to pick up the 12 months left on Gervin's $750,000-a-year contract, which also carries incentives up to $300,000.

Royals Win a Game, But Nearly Lose Brett

The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS - Just when the Kansas City Royals' World Series hopes were rising Thursday night, they almost took a fall along with star third baseman George Brett.

Brett tumbled into his team's dugout while trying to catch a pop foul bit by the Cardinals' Tom Nieto in the bottom of the seventh inning. Brett was caught by a Royals coach, Lee May, just as his head was about to hit the carpeted concrete floor. "Lee May made the play of the night," the Royals' relieved manag-er, Dick Howser, joked later. Brett ran toward the dugout, slid on his back on the slick AstroTurf at Busch Stadium and went feet first down the steep dugout steps.

The Toronto Blue Jays selected Jimy Williams to be their new manager on Friday, The Associated Press reported from Toronto. Williams, 42, has been the American League team's third base coach since 1980. He succeeds Bobby Cox, who resigned Tuesday after four years as manager and signed a five-year contract as general manager of the Atlanta Braves of the George Steinbrenner, the Yankees' National League.

Williams, who will be only the fourth manager the young fran-chise has had, was signed to a one-market.

year contract. Terms were not announced, but he reportedly will be paid about $200,000.

Cox led the Blue Jays to their first AL East Division title this year, but they lost to the Kansas City Royals in seven games in the best-of-seven league playoff after a club record 99-61 season.

Williams, a resident of Dunedin. Florida, will be managing a major league team for the first time. He was a minor league manager from 1974 through 1979, directing the Triple A Salt Lake City team to a Pacific Coast League championship in 1979.

Williams was considered one of the front-runners for managing jobs with both the Oakland A's and Seattle Mariners in 1984, but was passed over both times. Yankees Seek Fisk

The New York Yankees have reached agreement on a sevenplayer trade with the Chicago White Sox, sources familiar with the deal told the New York Times in St. Louis on Thursday. The trade is contingent on the Yankees signing Carlton Fisk to a new contract and getting Don Baylor to approve a move to the White Sox. Fisk, who can declare for free agency the day after the World Series ends, would join the Yankees with Britt Burns, a left-handed pitcher who won 18 games this season, and Scott Fletcher, who would be a utility infielder. The Yankees also may receive a lesser player to be named later.

The White Sox would receive Baylor, the designated hitter who asked to to be traded; Ron Hassey, the catcher who had a surprisingly good season hitting, and two pitch-ers, Joe Cowley, who was 12-6, and Marty Bystrom, who had a 3-2 record and an elbow problem.

Neither team nor the commissioner's office would comment on the deal, but the sources said principal owner, would quickly try to negotiate a contract that would

'In Our Household, The Book Is God,' Says His Editor And Wife as They Weigh In With Opus 28 (on Pissarro)

By Grace Glueck

NEW YORK — "In our household, The Book is God," says Jean Stone, wife, chief editor and business manager to Irving Stone, the writer. She is not speaking of the Bible, but explaining that whatever book the couple happen to be working on together - he writing, she editing - is one they take very, very seriously.

Though their collaborations are usually hailed less for their literary merit than their enormous research, no one can accuse the Stones of writer's block or flagging sales. The 27 books they have produced so far have sold 30 million copies, be translated into about 80 languages, and made millions (how many is not divulged) for the authors and for Doubleday, their devoted publishers.

And now they have weighed in ry," a "biographical novel," with invented dialogue, about the Impressionist painter Camille Pis-sarro. Tipping the scales at 2½ flat in a bookstore, will stand a pounds (just over a kilo), with 653 few of them upright so that buypages, "Glory" is the Stone's ers can see them better. third book about an artist since 1934, when "Lust for Life" (the story of Vincent van Gogh) became a best seller and launched their career. In between there was 'The Agony and the Ecstasy' (1961), an even more ripely titled success whose hero was Michaelangelo and which, like "Lust for Life," was made into a movie.

"We'd like Pissarro to become as well-known as van Gogh," said Stone, who at 82 is still a vigorous figure, soberly dressed in a suit of deep gray birdseye, his crinkly white hair bushing slightly out behind his ears. "But we know it will take a while." The couple came to New York recently from their Beverly Hills home on a promotional tour, a publishing ritual to which they pay willing

"Our friend Robert Nathan used to say, 'Isn't it enough to write the books? Why peddle them?" said Mrs. Stone. "But in fact, it's an extension of our writing. If we can spend live years doing a book, we can spend two months on press, television and lacks the glamour of van Gogh and Michaelangelo, Stone has spared no detail that might pique the reader's interest. He gives a picture of Pissarro's travails as a painter and a family man (the artist lived with and later married his mother's maid, fathering a slew of children), and conjures up a Paris art world where the schmaltz runs deep. In a scene at an artist's café, for instance, Pissarro encounters - assembled at a single table - Gustave Courbet, Honore Daumier, Pierre-Paul Proud'hon, Paul Ferdinand Gachet (van Gogh's physician) and Charles Baudelaire, among other 19th-century cultural luminaries. (Who picked up the check is not disclosed.) At one point in the evening, the artists advise Pissarro in a " collage" of homespun sentiments. "Art's a staple. Although he did not invent the "biographical novel," Stone has pushed it a long way, having produced a dozen books in the genre. Aside from the three artists, he has applied what he calls his "dramatized fact" technique to such disparate subjects as Mary Todd Lincoln, Engene V. Debs, Abigail Adams, Sigmund Freud and Charles Darwin. The genre has its disparagers — one critic has referred to Stone as "the Barbara Cartland of biography" but the Stones defend it as no less "authentie" than facts presented straight. "Historians tell us how accurate our work is," said Jean

For each book, the Stones bone up in libraries, hiring translators for foreign-language documents; then go on location to do research. They make lengthy visits to the places where their subjects lived. Working on "The Agony and the Ecstasy," for instance, Mrs. Stone studied Renaissance college and Italian at 1101 A culture and Italian at UCLA. Then the couple sold their Beverly Hills house to live for an extended period in Florence and

For the Darwin book, the scientist's home in London was opened to them. The couple slept in his bedroom and Stone worked in his study. "I could feel and hear his pen scratching on the paper as I sat at his desk," he said. And for the van Gogh book, the author went so far as to sleep in the artist's bed in a house at Auvers-sur-Oise, on the 40th anniversary of van Gogh's death "Depths of Glory" took five years and two months to research and write. During that period, the Stones lived in a hotel on the Left Bank in Paris, driving out to the surrounding countryside to visit the houses occupied by the Pissarros. At one point, they lived and worked in his studio at Eragny. The Stones have been - marital and literary -for 51 years, having met when he was trying vainly to place the manuscript of "Lust for Life." A born editor, according to Stone, she slimmed down the manuscript so strategically that a publisher (Longmans Green) snapped it up. They got married on the $250 advance. "I became indispensable," says Mrs. Stone. "It really takes two to do the job. And we've always worked together, even after our two children came along. If I was busy typing, Irving did the diapers." She has done one book on her own, "Dear Theo," a selection of Vincent van Gogh's letters, pub-lished in 1937. But until recently, in the interest of sales, it carried her husband's name. "I never cared about the credit until women's lib came along," says Jean Stone, whose name appears as the editor in all of the Stone books. "I didn't need it - I have the inner satisfaction of what I've done. But the book is still in print, and I finally said I'd like my name on it. Goldstein and Brown are to receive the Nobel Prize on Dec. 10 in Stockholm.

Lutz Rathenow, the East German playwright whose works have often been critical of the Communist regime, has received permission to visit West Germany for the first time, West German sources said Thursday Rathenow, 33, who had 30 travel applications rejected in the past seven years, will travel to the West German city of Minster to attend the premieres on Nov. I and 2 of his plays "Boden 411" (Lot 411) and "Das Spiel: Zammer 312" (The Game: Room 312). He will also take part in a symposium on the "Culture and Theater in East Germany." Communist authorities have harred Rathenow's works from large audiences, and, so far, they have been staged only in East German student clubs.

A judge has barred the sale of a private collection of paintings by artist Georgia O'Keeffe until experts determine whether the works. Award. valued at $5 million, are of "museum quality." The 15 paintings were bequeathed by O'Keeffe's sister, Anita O'Keeffe Young, to a foundation named after Young's late husband. The Robert R. Young Foundation donated one of the paintings to an unidentified muse-

Prince Charles paid a night visit to some of London's poorer neighborhoods to see how the capital's homeless, some of whom sleep in boxes on the sidewalk, are fending Haywood said the prince has made two of his houses in London available as overnight shelters for those who have nowhere else to live. Buckingham Palace said Thursday it had assured Prime Minister Margaret Thetcher's office that the prince was not criticizing her in remarks on urban decay attributed to him by a royal adviser this week. In an interview published Wednes-day in The Manchester Evening News, the royal architectural adviser Rod Hackney was quoted as saying Charles was worried he might succeed to the throne of a divided Britain" in which minorities in inner cities felt atienated. Hackney said the prince told him he wanted red tape cut and money pumped in to help the unemployed and racial minorities. As the heir to a constitutional monarchy, Prince Charles is supposed to avoid taking sides on political issues. П
